GOSPEL GLASS

was developed (by Marian Miller) out of a deep need to study and to seek that which is unknown, but the evidence of which is clearly revealed. It is sort of an outgrowth of the stained glass pattern website <http://PDQpatterns.com>, as a place to explore more inspirational types of stained glass patterns. Being a scientist, studying is what I love to do, and so the images and patterns on <http://gospelglass.com> are a direct result of my personal exploration into the literature, languages and traditions of the past which shape our current views of the eternal, justice, well-being and morality.

The questions and suggestions which arise give me insight into why we believe Elohim might actually be, and how what we learn can positively impact our existence. It is my wish that others will freely participate in creating the patterns on this site, by sending stories, images and ideas from which I can create patterns and products that both inspire and educate.

Dail-e-bread, is a simple positive scriptural thought-for-the-day in the style of mm, quick, easy and to the point!!! Submissions for Dail-e-bread text are totally welcome, desired and greatly appreciated. Email lists of your friends to whom you might want to send these hope-filled words are welcome too.

Manna is an idea from Rev. Nikki Cuya, and this first issue belongs to her. "Love letter from a Father" She and I were first acquainted through questions about some inspirational patterns that were posted on PDQpatterns.com. She does fabulous needlework of all kinds and first requested a cross stitch pattern made from one of my stained glass "parable" patterns. Since then we have developed a common dream for this newsletter, and for her uplifting comments on the stained glass and needlework pattern-products on GospelGlass.com. Here again, our goal is to have you send your stories about surviving trials, illnesses, and tragedies, and to send any images that would be appropriate for inspirational stained glass, or needlework designs as a result of your testimony. These will be written testimonies and the patterns which result will be posted on the website for everyone to enjoy. Stories of any length, and about any topic are welcome. Just send them by email to nikki.cuya@yahoo.com or to marian@gospelglass.com

We look forward to hearing from you.
